In the case of the state to the judges of the fourth district of New Orients, the court sets the question at rest. It says, considering the importance of the subject, and the irequency of such application, we have taken pains long since to define the powers of this court touching the writ of mandanus, and explains the arguments are supplied to the first of the subject and the irequency of such application, we have taken pains long since to define the powers of this court touching the writ of mandanus, and explains the arguments are supplied to the act of protects, and the notice of protest, which were in proof, but the defendant contends that it is not shown that he ever was notified of the failure of the drawer to pay the note; or of the protest, and that he is therefore discharged.
